Individual Rights

Services provided are confidential. Confidentiality entails the ethical and legal responsibility of the company to safe guard the unauthorized disclosure of information given out to others, as mandated by federal and state law. We strive to protect an individual's right to privacy. This means that information that we retain in an individual's record will not be disclosed without the individual's or legal representative's permission.

Our Employees

All of our employees, who have direct contact with our individuals, complete state mandated training, company mandated training, and have background checks completed, must be able to pass initial and random drug screenings. Employees are required to demonstrate competency before they are permitted to work independently with any individual. Our employees are also encouraged to take an active role in helping individuals design their plans of care.

What is a Supports for Community Living or “SCL” Program?

SCL's are programs designed to provide intellectually and developmentally disabled individuals with alternative options for living in their own homes, family home provider, or residential settings. The primary purpose of a SCL is to assist individuals become as independent as possible. Because SCL's are less restrictive than intensive care facilities, individuals take a more active role in how they live and where they live.
